JONES, QUIGGIN & CO.

INTRODUCTION

Jones, Quiggin & Co., was founded in 1855 when Josiah Jones bought into the partnership of Jordan & Getty. The new partnership was called Jones, Getty & Co., and in 1859 the firm became known as Jones, Quiggin & Co., with the admission of William Quiggin as a partner. They formed the Liverpool Shipbuilding Co., Ltd. in 1865 and although the shipbuilding ceased in 1875, the repair work continued until 1880.

The firm of Jones, Quiggin & Co. was technically innovative and built composite and iron ships early in its history, including sailing vessels, barges, tugs, dredgers, yachts, paddle and screw steamers, and even iron lighthouses. Much work was for customers abroad, and included commissions for the Confederate Government during the American Civil War, arranged through the commercial house of Fraser, Trenholm & Co. Ships built at this time included five blockade runners, one of which, the Banshee, became the first steel ship to cross the Atlantic in 1863. The National liner Egypt of 4,670 gross tons, built in 1871, was the largest steamer then built, with the exception of the Great Eastern (1858).

This volume was found on a rubbish tip. It is believed to have belonged to the late A.J. Quiggin, a descendant of William Quiggin. The original volume will not be produced; a photocopy is available.

Other records can be found in the Fraser, Trenholm collection, reference B/FT/4.
