Administrative/biographical history

Community councils came into existence in Wales in 1974, following the abolition of civil parishes by the Local Government Act 1972. The Principal areas of Wales are divided entirely into communities, unlike in England where unparished areas exist; no part of Wales is outside a community, even in urban areas. However, not every community has a council. Community councils in Wales are very similar to English parish councils in terms of their powers and the way they operate.
