GERALD THOMAS COLLECTION

SCOPE AND CONTENT

Documents relating to the career of director GERALD THOMAS (Born Hull 10/12/1920, died Beaconsfield 9/11/1993).

When Gerald Thomas died, his producer partner of 40 years Peter Rogers said: 'His epitaph will be that he directed all the Carry On films.' Indeed, for an intense 20-year period Thomas directed the Carry On gang through their innuendo laden exploits, and became responsible, along with Rogers, for creating one of the most enduring and endearing British film series, earning him his place in British popular culture.

Thomas originally studied to become a doctor, before war service with the Royal Sussex Regiment put paid to his medical career. When demobilised in 1946, he took a job as assistant in the cutting rooms of Two Cities Films at Denham Studios, where he took Assistant Editor credits on Laurence Olivier's Hamlet (1948) and the John Mills thriller The October Man (1947). In 1949, he received his first full credit as editor, on the Margaret Lockwood melodrama Madness of the Heart (1949).

During this time Peter Rogers had been working as associate producer with his wife, producer Betty Box, on such films as It's Not Cricket (1949) and Don't Ever Leave Me (1949). It was Venetian Bird in 1952 that first brought Thomas and Rogers together; Thomas employed as editor by director brother Ralph, and Rogers part of the producer team with Betty Box. Rogers was keen to form a director/producer pairing (following the successful example of Box and Ralph Thomas), and so gave Gerald his first directing credit on the Circus Friends (1956), a Children's Film Foundation production.

The pairing had early successes with Time Lock (1957) and The Duke Wore Jeans (1958), before the first of the Carry On series, Carry On Sergeant, hit the screens in 1958. The brief for Thomas was deceptively simple, to make the films cheaply and quickly; a remit that he stuck to for the continuation of the series, under the frugal eye of producer Rogers. The series continued, and in 1975 after 27 Carry On films, a stage show, 4 television specials and an ATV sitcom series under his belt, Gerald Thomas commented that: "now that Peter Rogers has set his own limit on the series by saying that the last 'Carry On' will be the first to lose money we continue to carry on merrily."

And carry on they did, with Carry On Columbus bringing the series total up to 30 in 1992. This continuation had, perhaps, just as much to thank for Thomas's amiable nature and exemplary people skills, as for his directorial abilities. In spite of the low pay and the continuous slapstick humiliation the Carry On actors faced, they continued to come back for more, and aside from the odd grumble would happily follow his direction. An example of this nature comes from the set of Carry on Khyber (1968). Kenneth Williams ruined the mood of an amorous scene with Joan Sims by loudly braking wind. Chided by all and sundry, he defended himself with the claim that it used to happen to Rudolph Valentino all the time. "But they", replied Thomas, "were silent films."
